Dodson House
Shallmar
Private

ca. 1908

The Dodson House is a duplex, two story, hip-roofed building of balloon frame construction. Its basic configuration is a four bay by two bay square plan with a one story, shed-roofed kitchen wing across the rear. The facade has a symmetrical, four bay arrangement with two center doors that are sheltered by a shed-roofed porch on turned posts. The building rests on a wooden post foundation that is covered by a plain board watertable. Board and batten siding covers the exterior walls and two over two sash windows light the house on all elevations. The interior is divided into two, one family units by a partition wall in the center. Each unit consists of five rooms. This house is the last surviving building in Dodson, an early twentieth century, company-owned coal mining town.

The Dodson House is located on the Southeast side of Shallmar Road approximately 1.4 miles southwest of its junction with North Hill Road. It is situated between Short Run and the North Branch of the Potomac River with its facade pointing southeast, toward the road.

The house is a duplex, two story, hip-roofed building of balloon frame construction. Its basic configuration is a four bay by two bay square plan with a one story, shed-roofed kitchen wing across the rear (NW elevation). A shed-roofed porch is located on each side of this wing (NE and SW elevations) and a shed-roofed addition was recently constructed on its west corner. The facade has a symmetrical, four bay arrangement with two center doors that are sheltered by a shed-roofed porch on turned posts.

The building rests on a wooden post foundation that is covered by a plain board watertable. Board and batten siding covers the exterior walls and two over two sash windows light the house on all elevations. The roof is covered with asphalt roll siding and has boxed rafter ends with a plain board frieze below. An interior brick stove chimney is located near the northeast elevation between the two bays.

The interior is divided into two, one family units by a partition wall in the center. Each unit consists of five rooms. The facade door enters into the front room with a dining room directly behind it and the kitchen in the rear wing. Two bedrooms are located upstairs.
